

I think it would not be right for any banks to get their way with the no-call-list. People get tired of telemarketers bothering people all the time. I think the no call list should stay as it is right now. The thing of it is the telemarketers call people after people already go to bed and late at night. And that's not right. My opinion is that they really should stay off the phones of people that don't want to talk to them.
